Kim Kane is an award-winning author, speaker and coach who has worked within educational settings over 34 years. Within that time frame, Kim's expertise carried over to providing trainings for a variety of organizations across the country. Her ability to take complex and necessary information, turn into understandable, applicable and staff supported information, is one of the reasons she has been a sought-after trainer. Kim understands the importance to meet educators where they are at, acknowledge the resiliency shown, validate the hard work demonstrated and mobilize their desire to be even better.

Within her trainings, Kim brings the importance of self-care and resiliency for educators; commitment to shared values as an educational system and the importance of being able to ask questions in ways that move a system positively forward for students and staff.

Participants will walk away with:

- The important role self-care plays for building resilient educators
- The importance of leaders within education to clearly articulate and support shared core values
- Effective communication styles towards building bridges and resiliency
- Ways to create safe educational communities for professional and personal learning

Testimonials

“ I have found Kim to be a master facilitator. She connects with a wide range of people through her humor and empathy. She has the ability to make even complex content accessible to her audience and is particularly adept at working with adult learners. ”

-Connie McCarty
